WEBSITE PROPOSAL FOR LIEMEX

A website that sells timber

INDEPENDENT STUDIO · ADELAIDE, AU

Your site gets visitors now. This one is built to turn more of them into phone calls and quote requests, by showing your timber the way you'd show it at the yard.

ALREADY BUILT

A working demo

With your products, timbers and photos in it.

SEE IT

liemex.vercel.app /proposal

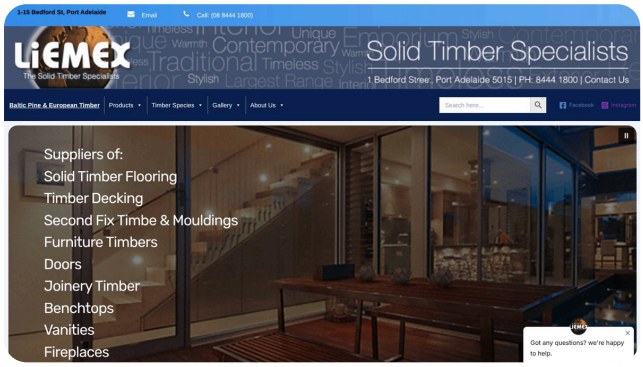

A short film, then the site itself.

Prepared for Dave
Liemex, trading as Baltic Pine & European Timber
1 Bedford Street, Port Adelaide

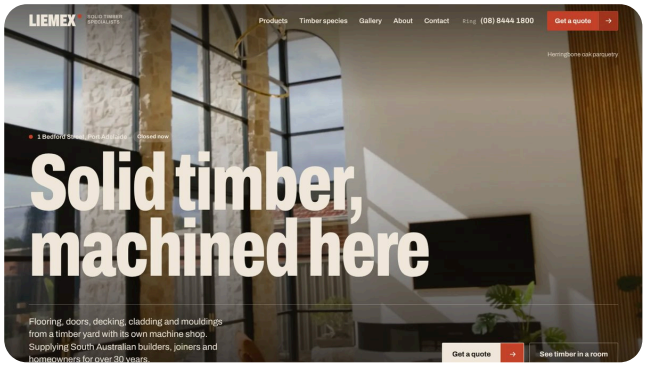

Prepared by
Troy Watson, Lumen adl

Before and after

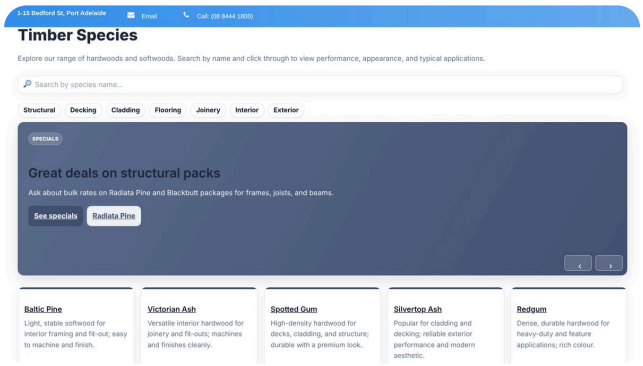

The same business, the same timber and the same photos. Left is liemex.com.au today. Right is the demo.

NOW A list of words over a dark photo. Nothing to click, and no reason given to choose you.

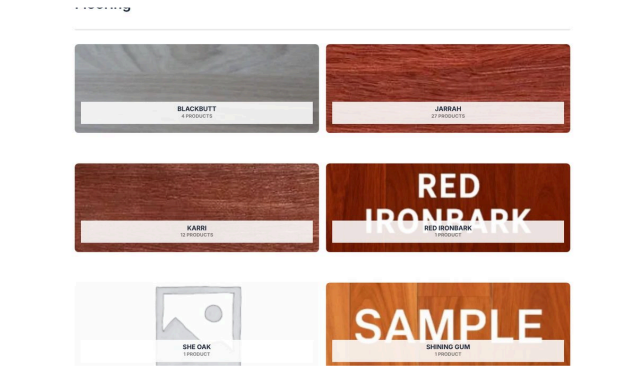

NEW One line that says what you do and that you machine it yourselves. Quote and phone in reach.

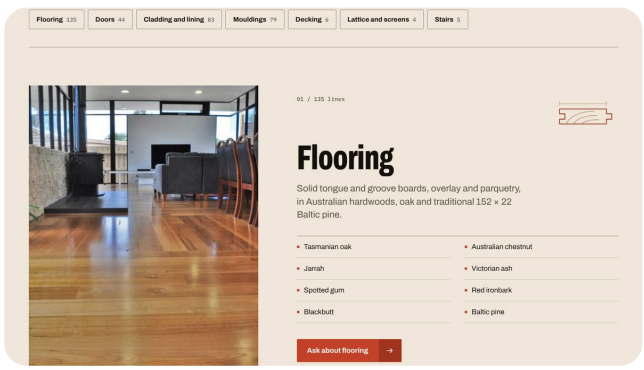

NOW Timbers as boxes of text. A customer can't see what any of them look like.

NEW All 17 timbers side by side as boards, the way they'd see them in your rack.

NOW Flooring shows placeholder pictures stamped "SAMPLE" and a missing image.

NEW Each range on one clear page with what's in it and a button to ask about it.

Where enquiries are being lost

We went through your current site as a customer would. Each of these gives someone a reason to ring a competitor instead.

It looks unfinished

Product pages show stock pictures stamped "SAMPLE", a blank placeholder image, and the homepage has a spelling slip ("Second Fix Timbe").

It disagrees with itself

The homepage says 40+ years and the About page says over 30. Two different email addresses appear.

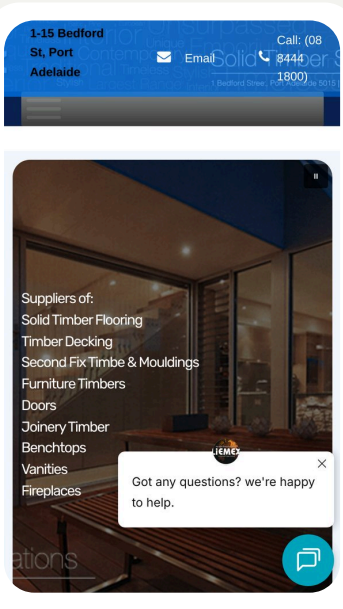

Your edge is buried

You saw, dress and profile your own timber and can match a heritage moulding. The site barely says so.

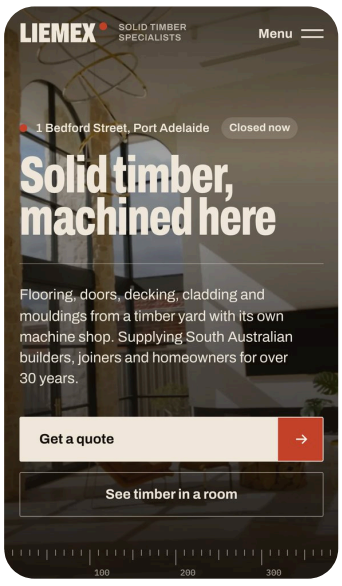

Nothing asks for the job

There are 356 products and no prices, so every sale depends on an enquiry. The site doesn't make that enquiry easy.

On a phone, where most people will find you

NOW

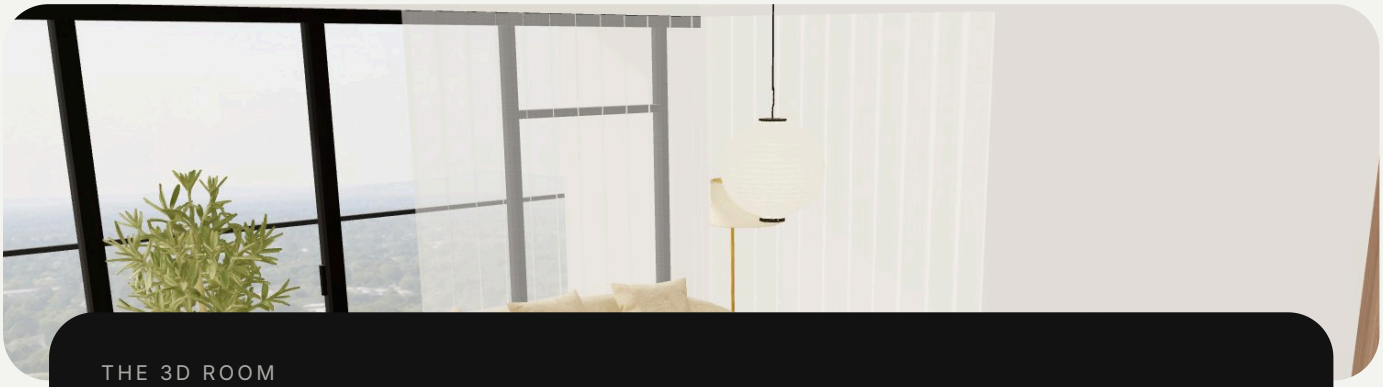

NEW

- Now: the header is cut off, the address wraps over three lines and a chat bubble covers the list.
- New: one clear line, then two buttons: get a quote, or see timber in a room.
- A bar with Ring and Get a quote stays within thumb reach on every page.
- It shows whether the yard is open right now.

> A customer who can't tell what you sell in five seconds leaves.

How it brings in more work

Every part of the new site has one job: move a visitor a step closer to ringing you or asking for a quote.

THE 3D ROOM

They see the floor before they buy it.

A customer picks any of your 17 timbers and sees it laid in a room: floor, door and skirting, in boards or herringbone. Nobody can picture a floor from a sample the size of a hand. This lets them, and none of your competitors' sites do it.

The timber rack

All 17 species side by side, each one click from the room or a quote.

Pays by: keeping people comparing your timbers, not searching elsewhere.

The metres calculator

An area and a board width become lineal metres, sent straight to the quote form.

Pays by: turning "roughly this big" into a job you can price.

One board, start to floor

An animation of a board being sawn, dressed, profiled and laid.

Pays by: proving you machine your own, which a big-box store can't say.

A quote form that reaches you

Short, with the timber and metres already filled in. It only says "thanks" once delivered.

Pays by: no enquiry lost between the website and your inbox.

Your work, up front

Your own floors, doors and decks run across the homepage and fill the gallery.

Pays by: showing finished jobs, which is what sells a floor.

Found on Google, kept on Google

Old page addresses point to the new ones, so existing search results keep working.

Pays by: not losing the traffic you already have.

What happens next

The demo is running now. Have a look, pick the look you like, and we finish it with your details and photos.

SEE THE DEMO

liemex.vercel.app/proposal

A minute-and-a-half film, the four looks to choose from, and links into the working site. It's private and hidden from Google, so it can't affect your current site.

From here to live

01

You choose

Tell us which look, and send the details below.

02

We finish

The whole site goes into that look with your photos and logo.

03

You check

On your phone and computer. Tell us what to change.

04

We launch

It replaces the old site at liemex.com.au.

What we need from you

- ☐ Which of the four looks you prefer
- ☐ Years trading, the email for enquiries, and Saturday hours confirmed
- ☐ A morning at the yard for photos of the boards, the machines and a few jobs
- ☐ Your logo file and the three catalogue PDFs
- ☐ Whether every product needs its own page, or one page per range is enough

Good to know

- ✳ The demo uses your current photos. A shoot would lift it more than anything else.
- ✳ The close-up timber images and the room are illustrations matched to your samples. Real photos replace them.
- ✳ A better website can't promise sales. What it does is stop losing the enquiries your visitors were ready to make.

Talk it through

Ring Troy and he'll walk you through the demo, or he can drop in to the yard.

Troy Watson, Lumen adl
0421 276 482
hello@lumenadl.com